

Pit Bull and German Shepherd

Por: Vitor e João Gabriel

Pit Bull

The Pit Bull was bred for the quality of fighting dogs or working terriers of eagerness despite the threat of substantive injury, strength, and athleticism.

The Pit Bull is the product of interbreeding between Old English Terrier and English Bulldogs to produce a dog that combined the gameness of the terrier with the strength and athleticism of the bulldog.

Pit Bull become famous for their roles as soldiers, police dogs, search and rescue dogs, actors, television personalities, seeing eye dogs and celebrity pets. A lot of important people had pitbulls like the american president who controled the country durring the second world war Theodore Roosevelt, Buster Brown, Helen Keller etc.

They did a lot of notable movies and television shows like: Flashdance, Our Gang, Cheaper by the Dozen, the Dog Whisperer, Pit Boss etc.

German Shepherd

The German Shepherd is normally used in the police to smell drugs or like guard dog, his weight is around 25 to 43 kg depends if its male or female. His height is around 55 to 65 cm. Because of its strength, intelligence, abilities in obedience training he is often used in police and military service proof is that Adolf Hitler had a German Shepherd.

German Shepherds were bred specifically for their intelligence, a trait for which they are now renowned. In the book The Intelligence of Dogs, author Stanley Coren ranked the breed third for intelligence, behind Border Collies and Poodles. He found that they had the ability to learn simple tasks after only five repetitions and obeyed the first command given, 95% of the time. Puppies are very smart too, they training every day to do your work.

Pit Bull: The Brave

German Shepherd: The Officer