Boxer: The little big child.

The Boxer is a breed originating in Germany. It is a mixture of Brabants bullenbeisser of Belgium and the English Bulldog.

The Boxers are large dogs, they have to face flattened. Fierce as they seem, are very childish, but are suspicious. Segundo the boxer is in thinking and attitude of a child 3 years, being the perfect companion for the family, adoring children.

The Boxer may have an average of 32kg and measuring 62cm long, his health is very fragile, often have many respiratory and cardiac problems, and also the race that dies of cancer more than any other.

The Boxer puppies: Play with me, human? Please?!

How to say no?! In the picture we have a puppy boxer with his owner, proving that are great for the family, and dogs are very fun who like to have the attention of their owners.

A female dog can have on average 6 puppies. The puppies are very fragile in the beginning of your first 4 months, should be brushed and bathed 1 time per week, and take the necessary vaccinations.

Labrador retriever: The unknown pranksters

The Labrador Retriever is a breed of unknown origin, but may be a close relative of the Golden Retriever. In 1476 this dog was popular in the UK, then moved to Portugal, Portugal, in 1500, was brought to the Americas to work for farmer, which did not work because the Labrador was a very playful dog.

But the Labrador, however playful it is, today he helps firefighters in rescue, it can be a guide dog, and help in sniffing illegalities of the police. The Labrador retriever is a very healthy dog, has an average of 36kg and measures 62cm, perfect for the family, but leave objects within their reach, they chew edible and inedible objects, but they are very electric and lovely.

The Puppies: Fragile, cute and with the tongue out...

The puppies are very cute Labrador, this attracts many people to have it. A litter has 9 pups on average, there are reports that a female dog had 19 puppies.

Born healthy, but during the first 4 months has to be careful because he may one adiquirir worms, by the habit of chewing things.
