Chapter 1

Rottweiler

The Rottweiler is an ancient breed dating as far back as the Roman Empire where it was used as a herding dog for cattle, the food that traveled with the Roman legions. Some of its ancestors may be the Roman war dog, sheep dogs in the town of Rottweil, Germany and the Molossor. By 1900 the breed was practically extinct. However World War 1 brought a pressing need for police dogs and there was interest once again in the Rottweiler. There is a memorial statue to the dog in Rottweil, Germany.

Height is 22-27 inches and weight 9-80-130 lbs. depending on gender. The Rottweiler's coat is smooth and coarse with a water repellent undercoat. Coat color is black with mahogany or tan markings on the cheeks, muzzle, paws and above the eyes.. Eyes are dark brown and ears are triangular and

The Rottweiler is a very loyal and dependable family dog. It loves children and is obedient and trains easily. The Rottweiler needs firm training and a strong owner because of its size. It is very protective of the family and will become aggressive if it feels the family is in danger. The Rottweiler is a dog for an owner that is familiar with dogs in general.

The Rottweiler has been used for herding, but is an outstanding guard dog and watchdog. It is used in police and military work and schutzhund (tracking, obedience and protection). The Rottweiler makes a wonderful family companion.

Chapter 2

Doberman

The Dobie is an elegant-looking dog, very protective of loved ones, with the strength to back it up.

The Doberman can claim its ancestry from several dogs - Great Danes, Rottweilers, German Shepherds and Pinschers with perhaps a little Beauceron and English Greyhound blood. Louis Dobermann, who traveled in unsafe areas decided he wanted a dog that would be a bodyguard and a watchdog. He then carefully created the Doberman Pinscher in the late 1800s, the dog which bears his name.

The Dobie is a very elegant and muscular dog. Height is 24-28 inches tall. Weight for females ranges from 66-90 lbs; males, 75-100 lbs. It has strong teeth and a scissors bite. Docking of the ears and tail has been banned in several countries. If left in their natural state, the ears and tail are similar to a hound. The short hair is thick and hard and close to the body. The chest is deep and broad. Coat colors are black, black and tan, blue grey, red and white. Breeding white dogs has been discouraged due to health risks and behavioral problems.

The Doberman is an enormously strong dog, intelligent and easily trained. You should never show fearfulness when disciplining your Doberman. Family members should take part in the training. Dobermans are fearless but they are not generally vicious or aggressive if bred by reputable breeders and well trained. They are very protective and loyal members of their family. A Doberman generally attacks only if it believes the family is in danger or it is being mistreated. They can live in apartments but need plenty of regular exercise.
