original name:Weisser Schweizer Schäferhund, country of origin:switzerland O

He is gentle, very intelligent and learns easily. He is loyal to his family and may be wary around strangers, but should never show shy or fearful behavior. Some people think the Arctic Wolf was mixed with the breed to create his caution, but this is not the case. The Berger Blanc Suisse gets along well with other dogs and is also excellent for training, such as agility, search and rescue, and obedience. They are even seen doing protection work, though they are not used for that very often and are not always up for the job.

They are also used as assistance dogs and occasionally for mushing.

The character of the Berger Blanc Suisse is gentler and mellower than that of the German Shepherd Dog, but when it comes down to it he is very much capable of and will protect his family

Name: São Bernardo

Oroginal name: St. Bernardshund, Bernhardiner

St. Bernard is a natural dog breed the Swiss Alps. It was developed from crosses of ancient molossos "soldiers" Romans brought to the region by the troops of Rome.

heir survival was assured thanks to the monks, who, since 1660, began to create them in a monastery called Hospice du Grand St. Bernard, located in one of the highest points in those mountains and place where travelers went to cross the Alps.

According to historians, the first purpose of the St. Bernard was to protect the property, then followed the rescue missions, which began in the eighteenth century. It was his job to find buried victims and seek aid from the monks if the victim could not move.
